Patties Food Group has partnered with Dr Karen Abbey to provide insights to the aged care & healthcare industry from an operational and nutritional benefits perspective relating to the comprehensive range Patties has available. This matrix has been assessed by Dr Karen Abbey and specifically tailored to address areas within the aged care industry.

FINGER FOODS

These options are not just for happy hour, events, and meals on the move; they are also suitable for dementia care. People with dementia benefit from snacks and finger foods due to reduced food intake or difficulty using utensils. It's important to preserve dignity during dining and support those who are active and need frequent snacks that are high in energy and nutrients.

MALNUTRITION

Malnutrition is caused by not eating enough food to maintain weight. In the elderly we often see unintentional weight loss & people eating small meals. Therefore, small meals and snacks need to be packed with energy and protein. Products indicated here should be considered as part of your overall menu planning strategy to minimise or eliminate malnutrition, whilst increasing choice and variety.

HIGH ENERGY & HIGH PROTEIN

As people age, their protein needs rise, necessitating aged care menus that include protein-rich options at every meal. For those with smaller appetites, it's crucial to prioritise both energy and protein to maintain muscle mass and weight. Focus on foods that are dense in nutrients and calories, providing substantial energy and protein in smaller volumes. Incorporating savoury snacks between meals is another effective method to boost protein intake.

CHOICE

Offer residents a diverse menu with options they can choose from. Residents should determine how many choices they have. Include a selection of pastries and finger foods to enhance menu variety. People tend to eat more when they can pick their meals, which improves overall food consumption. Ready-made meal solutions save time and expand menu options.

TIME SAVERS

It's crucial to streamline application for maintaining quality, reallocating resources, and reducing kitchen stress to save time and costs while expanding menu choices. Meal solutions and components simplify meal planning and preparation, offering more choices without additional resource use.
